Judy Holliday, Top Actress Of 1950, Had I.Q. Of 172; Career All Comedy; Later Private Life All Tragedy

Judy Holliday, an actress whose professional career was all comedy and whose later private life was all tragedy, introduced the word "couth" to the English language.

The etymological creation was part of her portrayal of one of the most memorable of a noted list of dumb blondes who turned out, upon analysis, to be pretty smart cookies, after all, writes M.C. Blackman, in the New York Herald Tribune. Miss Holliday's characterization of Billie Dawn in 1946 in Garson Kanin's "Born Yesterday," which was made into a movie after four years on Broadway, won her an Oscar in 1951 as the top actress of 1950, and launched her upon a career on stage and screen.

She could never get away from roles similar to the one that first brought her success. She summed up her career of parts once rather sadly: "You see them walk on the stage and you laugh."

In "Born Yesterday," she portrayed the part of the doxie of a rough-and-tumble junkman named Harry Brock, played with wonderful skill by the late Paul Douglas. Billie Dawn longed for someone better, someone "couth."

Webster didn't — and still doesn't — recognize the word, except as archaic, meaning "known, familiar." That wasn't what Billie Dawn meant at all. According to her dumb, blonde logic — which grammarians find hard to refute — she longed for a companion who was the opposite of "uncouth," which means boorish, rude, and unrefined. She wanted what Webster gives as the antonym of "uncouth" — graceful, polished, refined.

In the end, Billie Dawn taught the uncouth junk dealer the meaning of democracy and proved she was not as dumb as she looked and acted — though not as smart as her creator, Judy Holliday, who had an I.Q. of 172, and read Stendhahl and Proust.

Her last Broadway play, after a series of stage and screen successes, was "Hot Spot" in 1963, while she was in the midst of a five-year battle with cancer.

Recently she had been working on song lyrics with jazz musician Gerry Mulligan, until she entered Mount Sinai Hospital on May 26, when her case was believed to be terminal, says the New York Herald Tribune. She died quietly in her sleep at 5 a.m., on June 7. She would have been forty-two on June 21.

She had been living with her mother, Mrs. Helen Tuvim, and her son, Jonathan, in the Dakota, a large old apartment building on Central Park West. She had been divorced since 1957 after a nine-year marriage to 'cellist David Oppenheim.

Miss Holliday literally backed into the life of producer Max Gordon, who put her, in an emergency, into the play that made her famous. Trapped in a rainstorm in the Village, she ducked down a stairway leading to a cellar. A man opened the door and invited her to come in out of the wet. She backed in, not knowing what to expect.

The place was the Village Vanguard, and the man was the owner, Mr. Gordon. He bought her a soft drink, and she asked him why he didn't get some entertainment in his club.

This conversation led to the appearance of The Revuers, with Adolph Green, Betty Comden, Judy, and a couple of others. Miss Holliday went to Hollywood for some bit parts, and returned to appear in a Broadway comedy named "Kiss Them for Me," based on the novel, "Shore Leave", by Frederick Wakeman. She won the Derwent Prize of $500 with a scroll proclaiming her "the best supporting actress of 1945."

She lived on that $500 until Max Gordon, now a producer with some fifty shows to his credit, remembered her performance in "Kiss Them for Me" when Jean Arthur became ill during the rehearsal of "Born Yesterday" for an appearance in Philadelphia, says the New York Herald Tribune. He sent for her. Miss Holliday worked at memorizing the part of Billie Dawn almost continuously for three days and nights, performed perfectly and came to New York and instant success.

After the movie version won her the award of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, there followed a number of films, including "The Marrying Kind,"; "It Should Happen to You,"; "Phfft,"; and "The Solid Gold Cadillac."

In 1956 she opened in her second great Broadway musical, "Bells Are Ringing," with Sydney Chaplin. In it she portrayed a backstage switchboard operator, a role which she had filled in real life, in Orson Welles' Mercury Theater — not for money but because she was just out of school and stagestruck. "Bells Are Ringing" won her the Antoinette Perry Award, and she later made a movie version.

She also made another Hollywood film, "Full of Life," before doing her last Broadway play, "The Hot Spot."

Dumb? Miss Holliday once said in an interview: "We actors, like most highly specialized professionals, tend to live in a world of our own. We become involved in developing our skill, polishing our technique, and in general we cultivate an 'artist's immunity' to the outside world. It seems to me that this is a mistake we make. Do you become less of an artist because you refuse to accept inflation, war, and lynching? I don't think so. We can't turn to the theater page first."

With sentiments such as these, it was small wonder that Miss Holliday became an enthusiastic joiner of causes. This led to her being called before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee to whom she frankly admitted she had unwittingly contributed, says the New York Herald Tribune, to some subversive and Communist - front organizations.

Reverting in part to her dumb-blonde actress role, she told the committee that she was so confused she had hired investigators to investigate herself because "I wanted to know what I had done" in supporting certain organizations.

Cancer first intruded upon her theatrical life in 1960. She was trying out in Philadelphia with "Laurette" in the autumn when she had to enter a hospital for the removal of a throat tumor. The play was canceled. The disease plagued her intermittingly ever since.

Miss Holliday was born Judith Tuvim, an only child, in New York City. Her father, Abraham Tuvim, a tall, solemn man whose business was fund-raising for Israel, died in 1958. Tuvim was taken from Yom Tovim, Hebrew words for holydays, and Judy adopted an English translation of it during her first stay in Hollywood because people were always misspelling or mispronouncing her name.

Her piano-teacher mother left the audience of a Fanny Brice comedy for New York's Lying-In Hospital just in time for Judy's birth. At the age of four years, Judy was taking ballet lessons. She attended public schools and was graduated from high school before she found the switchboard spot at the Mercury Theater, says the New York Herald Tribune. Her mother and son are the only survivors.

One hundred other persons tried to get into the Frank E. Campbell Funeral Church, at 81st Street, and Madison Avenue, where the services were held, but had to remain outside because of lack of space. Among the mourners at the 25-minute, non-denominational service were: David Oppenheim, her former husband; and Sydney Chaplin, who played opposite her in the musical, "Bells Are Ringing."

Miss Holliday lay in a closed mahogany coffin covered with a blanket of roses, carnations, and peonies. Among those who sent floral tributes were Shelley Winters, Katharine Hepburn, Spencer Tracy, Harold Prince, Vincent Sardi jr.; Dave Brubeck, and Goddard Lieberson.

Among the mourners were: Abe Burrows, Gertrude Berg, Howard Teichman, Morton Gottlieb, Jule Styne, Betty Comden and Adolph Green. Miss Holliday entered show business with the latter two in 1938 at the Village Vanguard.

The silence of the chapel was broken by the Guarnerius Quartet from another room, which opened the service by playing the adagio movement of the Mendelssohn A Minor Quartet, says the New York Herald Tribune. Men lowered their heads and women dabbed at their eyes.

Fighting back the tears during the service were Miss Holliday's son, Jonathan, aged twelve years, and her mother, Mrs. Helen Tuvim.

Dr. Algernon Black, president of the Ethical Culture Society of New York, and a friend of Miss Holliday's, delivered the eulogy. He said that Miss Holliday brought a fine intelligence to the theater and was a person who had integrity, grace, and a love for people.

"The public," said Dr. Black, "will never forget her."

A private Hebrew service was held later at Westchester Hills Cemetery with Rabbi Paul R. Siegel, of Temple Beth Abraham, of Tarrytown, officiating.

In the obituary of Miss Holliday in the Herald Tribune, Max Gordon, the theatrical producer, and Max Gordon, the owner of the Village Vanguard, mistakenly were assumed to be the same person.

The service ended with a performance of the adagio movement from the Mozart String Quintet in

In Eleven Years Claims Conference Allocated German Payments Of $110 Million To Nazi Victims

The sum of $110,000,000 was allocated by the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany to needy Nazi victims in every part of the world during the eleven-year period of its agreement with the German Federal Republic, it was reported by Jacob Blaustein, of Baltimore, Maryland, senior vice-president, at the annual meeting of the board of directors of the Claims Conference at the Hotel du Rhone, in Geneva, Switzerland.

Although the last installment of the $110,000,000 was received by the Conference in 1964, it will continue to function until available residual funds have been allocated and until the program of indemnification and restitution payments to victims of Nazi persecution by the German Government has been completed. The Claims Conference is recognized by the Bonn government as the official representative of individual Jewish claimants, Mr. Blaustein said.

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the Conference, stated that, in addition to global sums paid to the Israeli government and the Claims Conference, the Federal Republic and the states of West Germany had paid out adjudicated claims amounting to $4,828,903,000 in indemnification and restitution up to the end of 1964.

The residual fund of the Conference stood at $15,648,000 as of January 1, 1965, it was announced by Moses A. Leavitt, of New York, treasurer. Of this sum $10,432,000 was turned over to the newly-formed Memorial Foundation for Jewish Culture, leaving $5,216,000 for special needs still unmet by the Claims Conference.

In presenting his summary of Claims Conference activities, Mr. Blaustein pointed out that distribution of grants started in 1954. "Eleven years might seem a relatively short period. But in the case of the Conference, the activities it has conducted and the accomplishments which have earned it a place in contemporary Jewish history, have all been crowded into those eleven brief years", he said. "Today, when we look upon Jewish life in country after country in western and central Europe, the transformation that has taken place seems to challenge all belief."

In listing the expenditures of the Conference, Mr. Blaustein noted that payments for relief and rehabilitation came to $84,600,000. This was administered by the Joint Distribution Committee, which supplemented it with $21,600,000 out of its own funds, bringing the total available for distribution to $106,200,000. Payments for cultural and educational reconstruction totalled $19,450,000; and for commemoration and documentation of the Nazi Catastrophe, $4,500,000.

Mr. Blaustein made special mention of the capital projects aided by Claims Conference funds. "Scarcely a community of any size exists, in the countries of western, central, and southern Europe under former Nazi occupation, which cannot show one or more capital projects aided by Conference funds," he said. "The communities will be equipped for many years to come with the basic physical plants essential to their operations. The Conference believes that the contribution it has made in this sector will prove of lasting value."

"Our contribution to the communities has been of the spirit as well as of stone and brick. The reconstruction has brought with it a revival of the Jewish spirit in country after country. In a growing roster of communities a will for accomplishment and a closer identification with Jewish life, Jewish values, and the Jewish spiritual heritage, is developing. It is our hope that this spirit will continue to grow and that it will draw nourishment from the Jewish schools and the community and youth centers which have been opening their doors in recent years."

In his report, Mr. Leavitt said that the total sum allocated by the Claims Conference during its last year of full operation amounted to $10,782,775 and was distributed as follows: $8,359,161 for relief and rehabilitation; $2,102,614 for cultural and educational reconstruction (including $405,000 for commemoration and documentation projects); $10,000 for the Hassidei Haumot; and $320,000 for administration and related expenditures.

Noting that the report is the last in the series of the $10,000,000 per year in allocations, Mr. Leavitt said, "It is a source of lasting satisfaction to know that the year 1964 represented far more than just a closing year in our operations. It marked an impressive climax to eleven years of Conference activities, and solidified the structure of accomplishment which we have been striving to build over the years. It should give joy and pride to us all that we have been privileged to have a share in the performance of these great tasks."

Officers of the Claims Conference, in addition to Dr. Goldmann, Mr. Blaustein, and Mr. Leavitt, are vice-presidents: Jules Braunschvig, of Paris; Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, Canada; Dr. Israel Goldstein, of Israel; Adolph Held, of New York; Sir Barnett Janner, of London; Dr. Siegfried Moses, of Israel; secretary, Mark Uveeler, of New York; and counsel, Maurice M. Boukstein, of New York.

Conservative Rabbis Plan New World Body For Jews

Religious leaders of Conservative Judaism projected a plan for the establishment of a world-wide organization that would embrace the "totality of Jewish life." At the same time they declared that the World Zionist Organization had failed to achieve such a purpose.

A statement dealing with the problem was presented to 500 Conservative rabbis attending the Rabbinical Assembly's 65th annual convention at the Concord Hotel, at Kiamesha Lake, N. Y., and was followed by a discussion of the subject, says the New York Times. Action on the plan will be taken at the Assembly's 1966 convention.

During the year, leaders of the rabbinic group will consult with leaders of other Jewish organizations with the aim of implementing such an international body.

The statement, which had been a year in preparation, cited the "stunning success" of the World Zionist Organization in mobilizing Jewish people and world opinion for the realization of Israel, which was established as a sovereign nation in 1948.

However, the statement asserted that the Zionist movement had not included the "majority of Jews who identify themselves with the Jewish people, but who do not necessarily identify themselves with the existing parties" that make up the World Zionist Organization.

The statement said that both the State of Israel and the World Zionist Organization "have tacitly accepted the claims of one religious movement for monolistic authority in the religious [illegible]."

This was a reference to the membership of Religious Zionists, who are Orthodox, in the World Zionist Organization. Criticism was voiced that this arrangement in the World Zionist structure had excluded Conservative and Reform Jewish groups. The Religious Zionists of America have as their counterpart in Israel the National Religious party, which is part of Israel's coalition government.

In presenting the statement to the delegates, Rabbi Joseph Sternstein, of New York, chairman of the commission that prepared the statement, declared that the Zionist movement "labors under the incubus of an antiquated and anachronistic organizational structure."

A [illegible]ght In A Raid Into Israel Doomed To Death

An Arab guerrilla who was captured last January during a raid into Israel has been condemned to death in Israel by a military court. An Israeli military spokesman announced that the marauder, Fatmud Bahar Muhammed [illegible] Jordan, was condemned to death in a man court after sittings that were closed to the public, reports the New York Times. The guerrilla was a member of El Fatah, the Palestine liberation organization.

The sentence was expected to bring appeals for leniency from abroad. Such appeals were addressed to the Syrian Government on behalf of Eliahu Cohen, an alleged Israeli spy who was sentenced to death by a special military court and publicly executed on May 18 in Damascus.

At that time, the Israeli Government called the Cohen trial a "travesty" of justice and said that "in no enlightened country is a foreign citizen executed in peacetime on charges of espionage."

Thus it was believed in Jerusalem that Israel would be more likely to heed appeals for leniency on behalf of the Jordanian. Under Israeli defense regulations, a death sentence handed down by a military court is automatically appealed to a military appeals court.

The Israeli military spokesman said the guerrilla had been found guilty on four charges brought against him under emergency regulations carried over from 1945 when the British ruled Palestine. The charges covered the "shooting and throwing of hand grenades" at an Israeli military patrol.

The spokesman said the accused had "admitted the facts" . . . but said he was not guilty and that the guilty parties were those who had sent him" into Israel.

"Because of the severity of the crime, the court decided not to base its conclusions on the testimony of the accused only but also called witnesses," the spokesman declared. The court was composed of three judges — two colonels and a major. One of the colonels, the president of the court, was a lawyer.

The Israeli said that, in accordance with a request made by the Israel Bar Association, the guerrilla had been provided with a civilian attorney. For security reasons, the court's deliberations were closed.

According to the spokesman, the guerrilla was one of six El Fatah

RELIGIOUS WELFARE SESSION

"In North America all peoples have been experiencing a religious revival. We Jews are very much influenced by this general religious revival," stated Rabbi Dr. Harry J. Stern, of Temple Emanu-El, Montreal, to the Religious Welfare session. "There has come to us a spirit of renewed Jewish confidence in survival and a renewed Jewish self-respect brought about by the establishment of the State of Israel," Rabbi Stern continued.

Rabbi Stern declared that in the United States and Canada "there is evidence of a growing maturity in every department of Jewish life, the cultural, the educational, and in the realm of Jewish scholarship."

Referring to the forthcoming session of the Ecumenical Council next November where the enactment of the statement on the relationship of the Church to the Jews will take place, Rabbi Stern declared that "This should prove to be a major assault on the roots of anti-Semitism throughout Christendom."

"Synagogue and church must face squarely the racial revolution," continued Rabbi Stern and pointed out that "we must be concerned with the problems of expanding populations, the growth of secularism, and the trend towards urbanization, and the need for land reform and for world disarmament."

"The Synagogue and the Church in the years ahead as I see it," Rabbi Stern concluded, "will undergo a tremendous growth of mutuality and Jews and Christians, despite many obstacles, along with other religions of the world will unite to find new ways to confront their common destiny."

The session then discussed a program of adoption of smaller communities by synagogues in higher centres, which had been projected by the Religious Welfare Committee, and which the assembly enthusiastically endorsed. Such a program involves a "Big Brother" relationship with the 'big' community active in consultative capacity to those in remote areas. Such a relationship has been recently established between the Jewish Community of Sherbrooke in the Province of Quebec and the Congregation of Sheveth Achim, of Montreal, through the Synagogue Council of Greater Montreal.

In the panel discussion were: Rabbi Sheldon Edwards, of Calgary; Rabbi Albert Pappenheim, of Toronto; and Rabbi Karpol Bender, of Kingston, who spoke on "The Jewish Student On The University Campus. The Jewish community is essentially a faith community and is one of the three major faith communities on this continent," said Rabbi S. M. Zambrowsky, of Montreal, who presided, "and we accept all challenges which stem from this premise."

COMMUNITY SERVICES AND LEADERSHIP TRAINING

A vision of broader, Canadian-wide campaign procedures, with communities sharing useful techniques and instructive procedures, was held out for Canadian Jewry by D. Lou Harris, of Toronto. Chairman of the Joint National Committee on Community Services, Mr. Harris set as major premise the advantages of a united campaign, so long as funds raised can match the need.

Education was the keystone of Canadian Jewry's cultural survival, and in buttressing its support he mooted the possibility of a joint effort by Keren Hatarbut and the Congress National Committee on Education and Culture in the area of recruitment and training of teachers.

Substantial credit for improved fund-raising in many Canadian Jewish communities was attributed by Mr. Harris to the introduction of improved campaign techniques by the department of campaign techniques of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds. This latter body, in conjunction with the Canadian Jewish Congress, operated through the Community Services Committee in Canada, which sponsored the Community Services Committee where the suggestions were made.

Noting the fruitful outcomes of inter-community exchanges, the speaker called for an increase of this development, and specifically cited the advantages to be gained from publishing nation-wide rosters of contributions, establishment of the nation-wide forms of community recognition for campaign services, and the creation of a national esprit de corps in campaigning.

He cited Windsor Jewry's experience in convening a parent discussion group on inter-dating in support of his proposal to disseminate news of worthwhile community programs to many smaller communities which live in isolation. Other programs worthy of emulation were the Calgary innovation of a Federation of Jewish Women's organizations which offered a pattern for the coordination of women's activities in leadership training.

Mr. Harris explored the pros and cons of Jewish community agencies sharing in general community funds as beneficiaries of community chests. As long as the Jewish contributors matched the average gifts of other contributors in their category or circumstance, every valid reason existed for integrating recreational, youth, family service, and community center programs into the campaign structure of community chest funds, he insisted.

The national chairman of Community Services for the Canadian Jewish Congress, Edward Barkoff, of Montreal, outlined the advisory services of the organization, administered across the country through the service of its executive director, Miss Florence Hutner, of Toronto.

Basic to the program's operation in any community was the voluntary desire of a particular city to seek its assistance. No set formula or nation-wide pattern was ever imposed, but successes had been scored in helping smaller Jewish communities streamline their approach to budgets, campaigns, development of women's divisions, planning services for the aged, and acquiring authoritative data on competing claims of Israeli and American cultural and educational institutions seeking funds in Canada.

Particular stress had been laid in recent years on developing local community responsibility for financing Jewish community center programs. Above all, his committee sought improvements across the country in recruiting younger leaders, and in amplification of this effort, reports were heard from five community spokesmen on direct proposals that had been tested and found successful.

Youth's frustration at seeing the same boards in perpetual control of Jewish community agencies had sparked a three-pronged solution in Ottawa, Gordon Roston reported. An annual three-day seminar open to twenty-five couples, fireside chats on particular agencies held at the homes of organizational leaders, and "person to person visits" had brought interested young community recruits into a fruitful relationship with the realities of Jewish life. Guest speakers culled from the ranks of cultural, political, and the diplomatic world had contributed to the program's success, he reported.

On assessment, Mr. Roston recommended that a concurrent policy of restricting terms of service on community agency boards to two years would encourage further participation by youth.

Of 111 "graduates" of Toronto's leadership training program, over 65 had been placed in positions of responsibility in agencies, W. Wayne Tannenbaum, of Toronto, said. He disapproved of board memberships for younger leaders, holding that they craved more active involvement in the day-to-day operation of the agency affairs. Because of the different interests and capabilities of the prospective leaders, he suggested a general educational program for the majority, and training in depth for candidates who showed more promise and interest.

Any program continued too long grows stale, Mr. Tannenbaum warned, and Toronto had at one time suspended its program for three years, and was currently reassessing its past operations again prior to instituting a new course of leadership development activities.

Other reports were by Jack Greenstein, of Calgary, and L. Faber. J. A. Lyone Heppner, of Montreal, in summarizing the proceedings, saw the national problem of splitting up family gifts, ultimately solved by leadership training programs. Once younger men have acquired a sense of responsibility, they would no longer evade campaign commitments behind the family enterprise facade, but choose to make gifts individually, he said.

SOME RESOLUTIONS

The Congress was urged to encourage the establishment of an advanced Institute of Judaica for scholars in the spirit of creative and scientific scholarship. It was urged to extend moral and financial assistance to creative talent in the field of arts and letters and "to support Jewish self-expression through the Yiddish theatre". It was also urged to give support to the establishment of scholarships for students to study at the University level in Israel and "to exert leadership in forming a partnership of organizations to devise a National Program of Adult Education."

With special reference to the Yiddish and Hebrew languages and culture the Congress was urged to consider a number of programs, subject to the availability of funds, including Yiddish radio programs in every major centre, subsidization of the Yiddish press and financial assistance to Canadian authors writing in Yiddish and Hebrew.

The establishment of a commission to survey Jewish educational needs in Canada and to be broadly representative of national ideological and central religious bodies in the field of Jewish education was urged.

Samuel Bronfman, chairman of the board of governors, announced that the board commended to the national executive committee the intensification of efforts to involve in Congress work and on Congress committees "the younger professionals and those in the academic life of the community".

The resolutions committee also recommended the adoption of a number of resolutions on youth and on the involvement of young men and women in the affairs of Congress.

Turning to the Warsaw Ghetto Anniversary Commemoration Congress recommended that memorial meetings across Canada be held henceforth on the eve of the 27th day of Nisan which should be recognized as a day of national mourning or Yahrzeit. It was also recommended that Congress take the initiative to insure that there be one major commemorative event for the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising embracing all sections of Canadian Jewry in each community.

Discussing the role of Congress and the community the resolutions committee recommended that encouragement be given to the formation of central local organizations encompassing as many as possible of the local groups within a consultative and cooperative framework and that these bodies be affiliated with Canadian Jewish Congress. It was also resolved that "the position of Canadian Jewish Congress in relationship to central local organizations be so defined to fully safeguard Congress independence."

Congress approved a resolution urging the formation of a national campaign clearance committee, representative of the major communities, for the purpose of consolidating and coordinating meritorious campaigns and to help counteract the tendency towards multiple campaigns.

A series of over 40 resolutions ranging from hate incitement and neo-Nazism, to reaffirmation of the use of Union printing was adopted by the 14th Plenary Session of Canadian Jewish Congress before it concluded its deliberations at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel. These resolutions formed the basis for many programs and activities by the national executive and Regional committees of Congress right across the country.

The resolution which was the subject of the most vigorous debate was the one dealing with hate incitement and neo-Nazism. It was finally adopted with the support of the majority of the delegates present at that session. This resolution stressed

Our golf course is 400 feet away from the main building, 250 feet away from the dining room (but if you want to play in your pajamas you can't eat in them) and 280 feet away from our 2 night clubs (in case you'd rather golf than dance 'till dawn). It's a champion course: 18 beautiful holes, 3 tees at every hole, 7,157 yards long. With lush fairways, fiendish traps and greens smooth as velvet. (Good velvet.) Plus a driving range, a putting green, an abundance of electric carts...all of it presided over by PGA Pro Tony Longo—our famous Doctor of Golf.

For the family we've got Broadway entertainment, 4 bands, a teen program, day camp, night patrols, tennis, indoor and outdoor swimming...but not for you. For you we've got a nice, soft bed. With television. Who can dance after 18 holes? You?

Histadrut Honours Wife Of U.S. Highest Court Justice

Mrs. Arthur J. Goldberg, wife of the United States Supreme Court Justice, was named "Woman of the Year" at the third annual award luncheon of the New York Women's League for Histadrut Scholarships held at the Hotel Pierre. Five hundred women paid tribute to Mrs. Goldberg, in whose honor the League announced the establishment of a perpetual scholarship within the Histadrut Scholarship Fund. The $2,500 endowment will be the source of annual scholarships for needy youngsters in the vocational high schools of Israel.

Mrs. Goldberg drew attention to the fact that "the Israeli war on poverty and the American war on poverty are a part of the same effort to bring justice to all the inhabitants of the land."

Stating that the United States and Israel are both dedicated to peace, to freedom, and to the achievement of political democracy, Mrs. Goldberg said, "This description surely fits the contribution made by Histadrut, the Labor Federation, to the development of Israel. For Histadrut is the moral force in Israel's society which is mainly responsible for the ethical concepts which shape the life of the country. There are other common ties between Israel and the United States. Both are pioneering countries. The American pioneer broke new ground in a new world.

"The Israelis and particularly Histadrut, pioneered in other areas which in our country we are beginning to develop. The Israelis for several decades have been carrying on a war against illiteracy, educational neglect and the poverty of the mind which environmental poverty produces. The nature of the resettlement of the Jews, the fact that many of them were oppressed and kept in ignorance and privation, particularly in the Oriental countries, required Israel to use all concerted services to combat this deprivation.

"The illiteracy and lack of learning motivation showed immediately in the army even as many recruits here must be rejected for failure to meet minimal standards. Camp Marcus on Mount Carmel has conducted three-month crash courses in remedial education so that young people are activated to learning. Such a policy obviously is in the interest of Israel's security, and the same is true of our own security.

"Ignorance threatens a nation. All of Israel when the first Palestinian pioneers settled there, was a Middle East Appalachia, and good part of the recent immigration is comparable to that one-fifth of our population in America which has been deprived and economically and culturally impoverished.

"For those skeptics who have doubts about the success of our own nation's war on poverty, I would like to point to the exceptional achievements which the Israelis have made. Those achievements have resulted in the newly developing nations of Africa welcoming Israel's technical aid and assistance in many areas. Here, too, the heart of Israel's war on poverty have been Histadrut and its institutions.

"Kupat Holim, the Kibbutzim, the cultural programs, the Moetzet Hapoalot, the various cooperatives and the workers' educational system all have in many instances initiated, and in other instances supplemented, the gigantic efforts of the Government and that of other groups such as the Jewish Agency to make of the new immigrants useful and productive citizens of the new society."

Judge Hilda G. Schwartz, director of finance of the City of New York, brought greetings to the League on behalf of Mayor Robert F. Wagner. Mrs. Jennie Grossinger, League president, addressed the luncheon, which is a major function of the group to raise funds for vocational training scholarships in Israel. The League is participating in a nation-wide effort to raise $500,000 for two thousand scholarships. Most of the recipients of these grants will be children of Oriental background, who will enroll in the 17 vocational high schools maintained by Histadrut.

CONSERVATIVE RABBIS PLAN NEW WORLD BODY FOR JEWS

Rabbi Sternstein said that Jews today "possessed of affinity and loyalty to Israel, refuse to permit their constructive efforts and interests to be deflected by sectarian alien party obfuscations."

In reply, Rabbi I. Usher Kirshblum, who is administrative vice-president of the Zionist Organization of America, said that Conservative rabbis could make their presence felt if Conservative Judaism affiliated with the World Zionist Organization.

The major purposes of a new worldwide Jewish organization, as outlined in the statement, at the Concord Hotel, at Kiamesha Lake, N. Y., says the New York Times, would be to mobilize opinion to protect the physical and economic security of Jewish communities "wherever these basic rights are threatened."

Still further, the new body would "foster those institutions which teach and preserve Jewish identity and values, recognizing at all times that reverence for diversity precludes coercion on behalf, or exclusion, of any legitimate Jewish group,"... and to inculcate "a sense of the authority" of the international body.

FROM THE CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS CONVENTION IN MONTREAL

"the paramount importance to the people of Canada and to the Jewish community in particular, that the spreading of race hatred be curbed by every legal means".

It declared that it was "imperative" for Canadian Jewish Congress to "take the initiative and render leadership at every level of our society to realize the widest freedom consistent with peace, order, and good government."

The resolution endorsed the brief presented earlier by Canadian Jewish Congress to the External Affairs Committee of the House of Commons and urged efforts for the adoption of legislation which would incorporate (a) effective measures against the propagation of race hatred and group libel", taking into account not only the Congress brief, but also the bills dealing with this question whose subject matter has already been introduced in Parliament; (b) "effective implementation of the United Nations Convention on Genocide."

The convention also passed another resolution dealing with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the neo-Nazism in which it criticized the CBC for conducting interviews with Canadian and American neo-Nazis which "lent further notoriety and aggrandizement to such persons".

This resolution deplored "the lack of taste and judgement" which leads to such programs and urged the CBC "to exercise greater tact, balance and sense of responsibility", in these crucial areas. It commends the attention of the Corporation to the provisions of Section 5 of the Broadcasting Act which reads "no station or network operator shall broadcast: (a) anything contrary to law; (b) any abusive comment or pictorial representation on any race, religion or creed; (c) any obscene, indecent or profane language or pictorial presentation; (d) any false or misleading news."

A number of other resolutions were adopted pertaining to community relations, including one on anti-discrimination laws which takes note that the Province of Quebec has become the seventh province to enact anti-discrimination laws in public accommodation and employment, while the Province of Ontario has established a full-time department with qualified staff to administer its law in this area. The Congress was urged to continue its efforts together with other bodies to obtain similar legislation in the remaining provinces (Alberta; P.E.I.; Newfoundland) and to seek extension of the coverage of existing legislation and improvement of their educational and enforcement provisions.

In a resolution on religious education in the public schools, the Plenary Session welcomed manifestations of a growing body of opinion against religious instruction in the schools and urged continued "active opposition to religious education in the public schools, as understood in common law provinces, working with other like-minded elements in the community and in such manner as each region deems most effective."

The Convention endorsed the Congress community relations program on religious freedom, anti-discrimination laws, strengthening of civil rights for Jews and other minorities; and approved the continuation of the working partnership in this field with Bnai Brith, the United Zionist Council of Canada, and the Jewish Labour Committee.

INTERNAL DISINTEGRATION AND ASSIMILATION

historical approach will be on the agenda with the participation of German and Arab spokesmen, together with the Jewish representatives.

The great problem of Jewish survival for our generation is primarily the problem of preventing internal disintegration and assimilation which is more dangerous than the threats and attacks from the outside. Jewish culture and education are the number one problem in Jewish life. Therefore, it is important that we have just created in Geneva a central foundation in which thirty-five organizations from all countries of the world participate; in which all shades of opinion and all religious and cultural tendencies in Jewish life are represented to create a common platform where the great problems of Jewish survival, and the differences of opinion between the various Jewish groups, can be discussed.

The Foundation will concentrate its practical work on major projects and it should be a yearly central forum where intellectual and religious Jewish leaders should discuss the great problems of Jewish life of today and tomorrow.

Canadian Jewish Congress Blames Jewish Individuals And Groups For Fomenting Mob Violence On Their Own Before Riot Against Nazis

In a hard-hitting statement issued on June 8, the Canadian Jewish Congress accused unnamed individuals and groups in the Toronto Jewish community of creating a tense and inflamed atmosphere which erupted into the Allan Gatdens riot, reports the Toronto Globe And Mail.

The Congress, official spokesman for Jewry, adopted the unusual procedure of printing a circular for distribution to an estimated 20,000 Jewish homes in Toronto and Ontario. A small proportion of the mailing is in Yiddish.

The Congress statement says: "Unfortunately, there are people in our midst who are determined to act on their own in dealing with the neo-Nazis, with little regard for the consequences to the community.

"Some of them sincerely avow nonviolence, others pay lip service to nonviolence, but from their actions seem bent on violence. During the few days before the event (the Allan Gardens riot), meetings were held and irresponsible leaflets circulated, all of which helped whip up some groups within the Jewish community to the pitch of fear and frenzy that assisted in creating the atmosphere that led to the mob violence of that Sunday afternoon. . . ."

Denouncing what it terms "these self-appointed shomrim (defenders)," the Congress asserts that these persons and groups were guilty of irresponsibility in creating a tense and inflamed situation which was bound to erupt into violence.

"Let us face it," the statement continues, "the consequences of the riot could have been more ugly, even tragic."

This handful of self-appointed leaders "who have mistaken noise for action and rabble-rousing for militancy," did not hesitate to use the attack on United Synagogue youths at Toronto Island for the deliberate further inflaming of passions, the Congress asserts. Even the victims of this attack acknowledged that it was not prompted by planned anti-Jewish prejudice, it notes.

"There was even a reported demand for legislation that would make it a special offense to hit a Jew, as though this were not already illegal," the statement continues. "Such a demand makes a mockery of what we are asking. This is another example of irresponsibility in places of leadership that we deplore and denounce.

"There is an understanding and sympathy for victims of the Nazi terror who cannot help but react emotionally when they see a Nazi appear flaunting his swastika. That this sympathy is shared widely in our society is seen by editorial comment in all Toronto newspapers . . . However, violence of this sort cannot be controlled and innocent persons suffer as well as Nazis.

"A second instance of mob rule and riot may well erase this human and humane reaction," the Congress warns.

The statement speaks of the "Monday morning quarterbacks" who purported to analyze the causes and background of the Allan Gardens event.

"Some, in their frantic search for a scapegoat, have blamed the press, the radio, the mayor, the police, the Canadian Jewish Congress or any other person or institution," the statement says. "In our view, no untoward publicity was given in advance by press or radio."

As for the hatemongers themselves, the Congress says it knew in advance that there would be a public announcement of the formation of a Canadian Nazi Party on April 20. The Congress convened a special, confidential meeting of many Toronto Jewish organization presidents and communal leaders on the afternoon of Tuesday, April 20.

"We informed them that there would be an extremely small number of neo-Nazis who would make their public appearance. Events proved us correct, there being only three in all. We then by letter requested the rabbis of our community to deliver a special message to their congregations at the final Passover services that week-end. These two steps helped allay any hysteria and panic that otherwise might have been engendered. That the information we gave then was accurate should confirm that we do have knowledge about the activities of the neoi-Nazis. . . ."

The statement says that the volume of hate propaganda directed at various communities across Canada was such that the quarantine technique of refraining from publicizing this activity was no longer effective, and the Congress had to confront and expose the distributors. Accordingly, in April, 1964, the Congress revealed the names of about a dozen persons who were known to be distributing hate material in the Toronto area.

"Twenty-year-old David Stanley, convicted in Birmingham, Ala., of assault with a weapon, who initiated the mass distribution of hate propaganda, now is in Vancouver where he is carrying on as he previously did here," the statement continues.

"His former deputy, John Beattie, is in charge of the Nazi operation in Toronto. Beattie's tactic differs from Stanley whose method was to insert hate material surreptitiously under the door, or through a slot of a fence, and then scurry for cover. Beattie believes in flaunting the Nazi symbols and appearing publicly in Nazi insignia, thereby getting much publicity and notoriety.

"Many questions are asked about the extent of the hate peddlers, their affluence and their international links," the Congress circular continues. "In numbers the group is extremely, we might even say absurdly, small. In recent months no more than a dozen have been involved. Their finances are equally slender. The 'purchase' of a house on Rhodes Ave. was financed by a down payment of $300 provided by an adherent who has subsequently left the fold.

"Since that time, a further instalment payment has been made, the money secured by passing the hat for contributions and by wheedling the funds from supporters."

The statement claims that the Nazis had a squabble among themselves because a member had absconded to Arlington, Va., pocketing the total treasury of about $30.

"The entire publicity for the Allan Gardens 'rally' was financed by the purchase of some printed leaflets worth less than $10," it declares.

The statement, issued over the signatures of Jacob Finkelman, national vice-president; Meyer W. Gasner, chairman; Sydney M. Harris, vice-chairman; and J. S. Midanik, chairman, Joint Community Relations Committee (Central Region), reviews the activities of the Congress with respect to proposed legislation against hate literature, and its efforts to convince every segment of the Canadian population of the need for such legislation.

In its message to Ontario Jewry, the Congress pledges to continue its campaign for legislative action and to maintain its surveillance of neo-Nazi activities, in co-operation with all law-enforcement agencies.

"We must above all exercise that restraint and self-discipline that are absolutely indispensable if we are to avoid the climate of terror, mob rule and intimidation which can only serve the purposes of the neo-Nazis," the statement declares.

Internal Disintegration And Assimilation, More Dangerous Than Attack From Outside

By Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Zionist Organization, from a press conference statement in New York

Too often the problem concerning the Jews in Russia is being distorted in its character with the result that accusations are being made against Russia which are not justified, and which can only delay the solution of the problem, and even harm Soviet Jewry.

The problem is not one of persecution in the usual meaning of the word, although there is anti-Semitism in many parts of Russia, and the government must be criticized for not acting more vigorously against anti-Semitic incidents, especially as anti-Semitism is a crime under the Criminal Code of the USSR. But to compare in any way the policy of the Soviet government with the Nazis is not only a hideous distortion, but highly unfair to Soviet Russia, which saved hundreds of thousands of Jews when they escaped from the Nazis at the beginning of the Second World War.

The problem in Russia is not that of denying Jews civic rights or possibilities of livelihood and professional careers. It is the denying to Jews of the facilities to maintain their Jewish identity and to develop their existence as a distinct religious and national minority recognized as such under the law.

The main defense advanced by the Soviets is that their nationality policy, which gives a large measure of autonomy to minorities, especially in the cultural field, is based on the territorial concentration of these minorities. This is not valid especially in view of the fact that much smaller minorities than the Jews have these facilities.

For instance, the Germans who, for a great part, collaborated with the Nazis during the war, are also not territorially concentrated, but are distributed over several states of the USSR. The Germans today are being given cultural rights such as maintaining schools in German, publishing daily papers in German, having their own organizations. All of this is being denied to the Jews. For that reason, world Jewry has to continue to arouse public opinion in support of the demand for equal treatment of the Jewish minority, as a minority.

But we must not expect to force the Soviet Union to change its policy by extreme attacks and methods to which great power is not likely to yield. Our only hope is to arouse support through personalities and groups whose opinion is very highly respected by the Soviet government and by establishing contacts with the Soviet government in an effort to persuade it that it is against their own interest to pursue this policy, thereby antagonizing millions of Jews and non-Jews who feel that it is the sacred right of the Soviet Jewry to safeguard its specific character, maintain its contact with the Jewish people as a whole, and allow those who want to, be reunited with their families in Israel and elsewhere.

I welcomed the courageous stand taken by Mr. Bourguiba, President of Tunisia, even if the content of his proposals is not acceptable as it is. But the important thing is that a recognized Arab leader, one of the most popular of all Arab leaders in his own country, has dared to come out and tell the Arab world that it must accept the fait accompli of Israel's existence and look for political methods to normalize Israel-Arab relations, solve the refugee problem and not rely on a war of annihilation, which is both immoral and unrealistic. I am sure that many Arab leaders think the same way although they may not have the courage displayed by Mr. Bourguiba to state it publicly.

The time has come, to begin to create the atmosphere for Arab-Israel talks which may have to follow later. Just to sit and wait till a new generation of Arabs may be ready to accept Israel, is not enough and nobody knows if time, in this respect, works for a peaceful solution. Israel must get Jewish communities outside that country interested in this problem, especially where there is a large Arab dispersion which for many years lived in good relations with the Jewish communities, primarily in South America.

There is a danger that the Arab-Israel conflict may develop into an Arab-Jewish conflict, which, historically viewed, would be disastrous. The rencontre between the Jewish people and the Arab peoples, historically seen, has been one of the most creative, peaceful rencontres in the history of the Jewish people, and was better than with many other peoples and civilizations in the world.

It would be a denial of the past, and a violation of the tradition of Arab-Jewish relations for many centuries, if a violent conflict would develop between the Arabs and the Jewish people with the Arabs becoming the forefront of neo-Nazi movements.

Naturally, the Jews outside of Israel cannot negotiate on behalf of Israel. The concrete problems will have to be discussed directly between Israel and the Arabs when the time comes. But the Jewish people, with the help of many non-Jewish liberals of good will, could help create an atmosphere which would facilitate and create a psychological basis for direct Israel-Arab contacts.

With regard to the German-Jewish problem, the specific issues are for the time being solved. Germany is normalizing its relations with Israel, and the Statute of Limitations is prolonged for four and one-half years which, although not fully satisfactory, has eliminated the problem for the time being. With regard to the legislation on indemnification, the final bill was adopted and although it does not satisfy all demands of the Jewish victims of Nazi persecution, it does provide enough funds (another amount of more than a billion dollars) to satisfy the most necessary demands of these victims.

But the solution of these concrete problems has not yet solved the great historical problem of the relation between Germany and the Jewish people after the unique crime committed against millions of Jews by the Nazi regime.

This problem will require a long period to be solved. No decent German expects the Jewish people to forget or to forgive what has been done, but, on the other hand, just as Israel was interested in normalizing its relations with Germany, the Jewish people also cannot ignore the existence of the new Germany, which is becoming more and more powerful, and a Germany that is not Nazi-inspired or dominated.

It is a great and delicate problem which has to be handled on both sides with a great amount of good will, tact and statesmanship.

At the forthcoming meeting of the executive of the World Jewish Congress in Strasbourg both the problems of Arab-Israel relations and German-Jewish relations on a high level of
